PROGRAM OUTCOME

Legal process is difficult and distressing to navigate, so it is best to avoid this when possible. It is very important to maintain dental records so that it can be produced as evidence in the consumer court in the event of a malpractice and dental insurance claim. Consent is a vital part of patient treatment and management. The concept of informed consent arises from the fundamental ethical principle of autonomy and rights of self-determination. Consent in dentistry follows the same basic principles as in other regulation of medicine. Usually there are a number of different choices available to a patient and all of these should be discussed with the patient and oral health professional must explain the proposed treatment to the patient, the risks involved, and the possibility of any alternative treatment and ensure that appropriate consent is obtained.
