“EDUCATION IS NOT THE LEARNING OF FACTS BUT TRAINING OF MIND TO THINK”
-ALBERT EINSTEIN

Composite resins have been advocated for decades as a means to conservatively restore minor, moderate and even large defects in teeth caused by decay or trauma. Their indication is predicated on the need to preserve as much healthy tooth structure as possible while using the synthetic composite resin materials to completely replace and augment lost to its structure by adhesive dentistry. Composite resins are tooth-colored materials that can be applied to the remaining surfaces of teeth to replace lost tooth structure in such a way as to actually make them one, blending and exactly matching the physical characteristics and color of natural teeth and strengthening them in the process.
