Abstract of the Research

ABSTRACT

Introduction: Oral submucous fibrosis is a chronic, insidious disease caused by areca nut use and is associated with both significant morbidity (including burning sensation and reduced mouth opening) and an increased risk of malignancy. Treatment of OSMF has largely been symptomatic and is associated with high recurrence rate. Curcumin has anti-inflammatory, antioxidant, antifibrotic and antitumor activities. All such properties of Curcumin suggest the possibility of its use in the management of oral submucous fibrosis.

Materials and Methods: 40 patients of OSMF were divided into 2 groups (Group I and II). Group I patients were given oral administration of 2 capsules of curcumin 300mg once daily for 3 months. Group II patients were given weekly intralesional injections of a combination of dexamethasone 4mg/ml and hyaluronidase 1500 IU for a period of six weeks and also prescribed SM Fibro (Alpha lipoic acid 50mg, Beta-carotene 10mg, Elemental copper 1mg, Elemental selenium 75mcg, Lycopene 5mg, Vitamin E 10 IU, Zinc sulphate 27.45mg in form of the capsule) for 3 months. Patients were assessed for burning sensation, inter incisal distance, cheek flexibility and tongue protrusion at an interval of every 15 days for 3 months. Physiotherapy consisting of lip, cheek and tongue exercises twice a day for 6 weeks was advised in both the groups.

Website: www.theoxford.edu

Results: Both the groups showed a statistically significant reduction in burning sensation and an increase in inter incisal distance, cheek flexibility and tongue protrusion at the end of 1st month of study period ($p < 0.05$). The mean values for the reduction in burning sensation in Group I was 6.8 ± 1.17 to 0.45 ± 0.52 (from baseline to end of the study). Group II also showed significant reduction from 6.10 ± 1.52 to 0.30 ± 0.48 . The mean value increase in inter incisal distance was 23.64 ± 1.96 mm to 28.09 ± 3.62 mm in Group I and 21.30 ± 5.31 mm to 24.40 ± 5.40 mm in Group II from baseline to 1st month.

Conclusion: In OSMF patients the clinical response to curcumin was comparable to intralesional injections of dexamethasone, hyaluronidase and antioxidant supplementation. Hence, the study concludes that curcumin can be an alternative, safe and effective treatment regime in the management of OSMF. Long-term follow up studies with larger sample size are recommended.

Materials used : Ocimum Sanctum capsule 500mg (Himalaya Drug Company) Tulsi leaves extract 500mg.

Description: The oxford Dental College has joined hands with Himalaya Drug Company for student research to carry their dissertation work. The below abstract is the study design followed in the Himalaya Drug Company lab.

Abstract: Oral submucous fibrosis (OSMF) is one of the most common premalignant conditions in India associated with betel nut chewing. Pindborg and sirsat in 1996 defined OSMF as an insidious chronic diseases affecting any part of the oral cavity and sometimes pharynx. Although occasionally, preceded by and /or associated with vesicle formation, it is always associated with juxta-epithelial inflammatory reaction followed by a fibro elastic change of the lamina propria with epithelial atrophy leading to stiffness of mucosa and causing trismus and inability to eat. It induces burning sensation and results in reduced MoUth opening, cheek flexibility and tongue movements. The fibrotic changes of the pharynx and esophagus cause difficulty in swallowing and speech defects.

Various herbal treatment modalities are used for the management of OSMF like Aloever, Curcumin, Tulsi (Ocimum sanctum) has emerged as one of the treatment modalities for OSMF. It has high antioxidant and anti-inflammatory properties. Tulsi (Ocimum sanctum) has the capacity to block the cyclooxygenase and lipoxigenase pathways of arachidonic metabolism and responsible for anti-inflammatory activity.

Beneficiaries: Postgraduate students of The Oxford Dental College

Materials used :

The study included 80 subjects within the age group of 25-60 years working in corporate sectors, who were assessed for stress levels using HAD Scale and accordingly categorized into a STUDY group and a CONTROL group. The STUDY group comprised of 40 subjects with HAD score of more than 8 and the CONTROL group comprised of 40 subjects with HAD score of 0-7 ensuring equal distribution of genders in both the groups. The subjects underwent a complete clinical examination to identify stress related oral diseases. One ml of unstimulated saliva was collected from each subject which was quantified for salivary alpha amylase later. All the findings were subjected to statistical analysis.

Description:

The oxford Dental College has joined hands with Skanda Life Sciences for student research to carry their dissertation work. The below abstract is the study design followed in the above-mentioned lab.

Abstract: Psychological stress has been implicated in various oral diseases like Recurrent aphthous stomatitis(RAS), Oral lichen planus (OLP), Burning Mouth syndrome(BMS), Dry Mouth and Temporomandibular joint disorders(TMDs). People working in the corporate sectors are particularly at high risk of developing stress and its associated disorders. Evaluation of psychological stress can be done by salivary alpha amylase which has been considered as a biomarker of stress.

Abstract

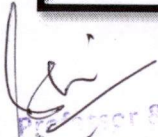

ABSTRACT

BACKGROUND & OBJECTIVE:

Persistent or secondary intraradicular infection is a major cause of post endodontic treatment disease. The effective removal of filling material from the root canal system is essential to ensuring a successful outcome of the retreatment procedure. The objective of the study is to evaluate the effectiveness of removal of thermoplasticized gutta-percha and epoxy resin based sealer with Wave one gold reciprocating file, Niocendo and ProTaper universal retreatment rotary system and to quantify the volume percentage of thermoplasticized gutta-percha remnants and resin sealer in root canal using Cone Beam Computed tomography.

MATERIAL & METHODS

Forty-five extracted, human mandibular first premolars with single straight oval canals were radiographed and selected. The root canals were instrumented with the ProTaper universal system up to F1 and obturated with thermoplasticized gutta-percha and resin sealer using elements system. After 1 month, the samples were randomly divided into three groups (n = 15) according to the retreatment system used: ProTaper Universal, Niocendo and Wave one gold. The specimens were scanned by a cone beam computed tomography device after the root filling and retreatment procedures, and analyse the volume percentage of filling material remaining in the root canal using cone beam computed tomography software.

Website: www.theoxford.edu

RESULTS:

The test results showed that Waveone Gold Retreatment files group showed significantly highest Volume percentage of filling material remaining as compared to ProTaper Universal and NeoEndo Retreatment files group at $P < 0.001$. However, no significant differences in the mean Volume percentage of filling material remaining were noted between ProTaper Universal and NeoEndo Retreatment files [$P = 0.26$].

INTERPRETATION & CONCLUSION:

Protaper Universal Retreatment system was more effective than the Neoendo retreatment files and Wave One Reciprocation file in the removal of thermoplasticized gutta-percha and epoxy resin-based sealer during the retreatment of oval root canals in extracted premolar teeth.

KEYWORDS: Retreatment, Protaper Universal, Neoendo, Wave one gold, Thermoplasticized obturation, resin sealer, Cone beam computed tomography.

Abstract

Need for the Study :

An endo-perio lesion can have varied pathogenesis which ranges from quite simple to relatively complex. These lesions often present challenges to the clinicians as far as diagnosis and prognosis are concerned.

The clinical diagnosis of periodontal osseous lesions, such as a vertical bone defect or furcation involvement, presents a challenge. Thus, the treatment of patients with advanced periodontal disease requires not only extensive clinical recording but also radiological examination.

The standard imaging includes intraoral and panoramic radiographs, as these offer two-dimensional information they are insufficient for the assessment of the fine bone structures.¹

CBCT is more accurate in the diagnoses of periodontal diseases and its aspects such as the amount of furcation involvement, type of defects and their dimension. It identifies periodontal bone loss both horizontally and vertically.²

CBCT provides defect morphology and comprehensive details of the remaining alveolar bone structures.³

CBCT is capable of generating accurate and reliable submillimeter resolution images in all the spatial dimensions.⁴

CBCT offers a clearer view of the buccal and oral aspects of periodontally affected sites.⁵

The spatial representation of the alveolar bone has a significant role in the treatment of endo-perio lesions and making therapy decisions. Hence this study is undertaken to evaluate endo – perio lesions using CBCT.

7.1) Source of Data:

The study will be conducted among the patients with endo-perio lesions, visiting the outpatient department of Oral Medicine and Radiology, The Oxford Dental College, Bangalore.

furcation involvement suggestive of endo-perio lesions will be subjected for intra-oral periapical radiography.

The periapical radiograph will be evaluated for the involvement of both pulp and periodontium, 100 teeth with endo-perio lesion will be subjected for the CBCT examination.

CBCT imaging of teeth will be performed in Oral D Diagnostic Centre, Bangalore using Kodak Carestream CS 9300 system machine set at 90 kVp, 10 mA and 11.26 seconds with a typical voxel size of 90 μ m. CS 3D Imaging software will be used for reconstruction and assessment.

CBCT images will be studied for the presence of accessory canals, canaliculi in the furcation, the loss of alveolar bone pattern, grades of furcation, plus the width and depth of bone defects. All the images will be assessed by three radiologists with varying levels of experience in reading CBCT images .

They will be calibrated through a training session and each will receive the same model of instructions. Interoperation variability will also be assessed.

ABSTRACT

BACKGROUND & OBJECTIVE:

Persistent or secondary intraradicular infection is a major cause of post endodontic treatment disease. The effective removal of filling material from the root canal system is essential to ensuring a successful outcome of the retreatment procedure. The objective of the study is to evaluate the effectiveness of removal of thermoplasticized gutta-percha and epoxy resin based sealer with Wave one gold reciprocating file, Neoendo and Protaper universal retreatment rotary system and to quantify the volume percentage of thermoplasticized gutta-percha remnants and resin sealer in root canal using Cone Beam Computed tomography.

MATERIAL & METHODS

Forty-five extracted, human mandibular first premolars with single straight oval canals were radiographed and selected. The root canals were instrumented with the ProTaper universal system up to F1 and obturated with thermoplasticized gutta percha and resin sealer using elements system. After 1 month, the samples were randomly divided into three groups (n = 15) according to the retreatment system used: ProTaper Universal, Neoendo and Wave one gold. The specimens were scanned by a cone beam computed tomography device after the root filling and retreatment procedures, and analyse the volume percentage of filling material remaining in the root canal using cone beam computed tomography software

Website: www.theoxford.edu

RESULTS:

The test results showed that Waveone Gold Retreatment files group showed significantly highest Volume percentage of filling material remaining as compared to ProTaper Universal and NeoEndo Retreatment files group at $P < 0.001$. However, no significant differences in the mean Volume percentage of filling material remaining were noted between ProTaper Universal and NeoEndo Retreatment files [$P = 0.26$].

INTERPRETATION & CONCLUSION:

Protaper Universal Retreatment system was more effective than the Neoendo retreatment files and Wave One Reciprocation file in the removal of thermoplasticized gutta-percha and epoxy resin-based sealer during the retreatment of oval root canals in extracted premolar teeth

Oral D Diagnostics

Partnering Institute: Oral D Diagnostics

Objective: Carry out Research activities

Location: Oral D Diagnostics

Organized by: Department of Oral Medicine and Radiology

Beneficiaries: Postgraduate students

Materials used : CBCT

Description: The oxford Dental College has joined hands with Oral D Diagnostics for student research to carry their dissertation work. The below abstract is the study design followed in the Oral D Diagnostics lab.

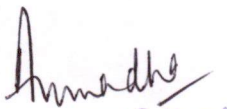

Abstract:

"Evaluation Of Association Between Maxillary Posterior Teeth Periapical Pathologies and Maxillary Sinus Mucosal Changes" - A Cone Beam Computed Tomography (CBCT) Study

Maxillary sinusitis is a globally prevalent disease which is mainly caused by allergies or respiratory infections. Due to the proximity of the roots of maxillary posterior teeth to the sinus floor, a substantial proportion of maxillary sinusitis cases have an odontogenic origin.¹The inflammatory changes in the mucosal lining caused by periapical infection can lead to the development of sinusitis. Various sinus abnormalities like mucosal thickening, sinus polyp, antral pseudocyst, nonspecific opacification, periostitis and antral calcifications have been associated with periapical lesions.²

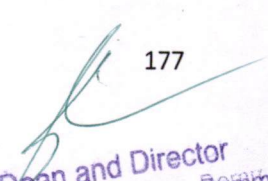

A radiographic approach to diagnosis of odontogenic sinusitis is two-dimensional Intra Oral Periapical Radiographs (IOPAR), but limited by in-accuracy in location and extent of periapical lesions due to the superimposition of images of palatal root or zygomatic bone. Although Computed Tomography (CT) is the gold standard diagnostic technique for sinus pathologies, it is limited by low spatial resolution.³ Therefore, Cone Beam Computed Tomography (CBCT) with lower radiation dose and higher spatial resolution, may be helpful.³ Both axial and coronal views allow the clinician to assess the relationship of a periapical lesion to a sinus floor defect and any resultant changes in the soft tissues of the sinus. Hence, in this study, the association between maxillary posterior teeth periapical pathologies and maxillary sinus mucosal changes will be evaluated using CBCT imaging.
